Not illustrated. 1911 Excerpt: .story was finished. For its unrealized, but extreme improbability the theory of the accidental settlement of the Pisa tower has hardly a rival. Ranieri Grassi, who was the most vigorous exponent in modern times of the theory of the intentional construction of the Leaning Tower of Pisa, and who was the first observer of the facts relating to the changes of height in the spiral stairway and in the dip of its ceiling, adduced another argument which deserves serious attention. Grassi quotes Michele da Vico, an author of the 14th century, as expressly mentioning the strength of the foundations and the fact that they were allowed to rest for a year before the construction was undertaken. The tower was finished in the middle of the 14th century; therefore, says Grassi, da Vico could not have praised the foundations if the tower had settled, and if it...
