Excerpt from Evaporating, Condensing and Cooling Apparatus: Explanations, Formulae and Tables for Use in Practice The problems which are to be solved in the construction of apparatus for evaporating, condensing and cooling, are intimately connected with the laws of the transfer of heat. Although, generally speaking, these physical laws can be regarded as known, yet reliable knowledge of the practical coefficients, applicable in each of the many different cases, is often wanting. Without these coefficients the constructing engineer cannot work. Numberless experiments have been conducted by more or less competent observers to supply this want, but their results are scattered through the literature, were often obtained only for very special cases, and occasionally without regard to all the prevailing conditions. Many have been kept secret by their discoverers as valuable prizes. The very excellent work published by Professor Molier at the instance of the Verein deutscher Ingenieure in the Zeitschrift det Vereines deutscher Ingenieure, 1897, Nos. 6 and 7, in which the present condition of our knowledge of these relations is very clearly displayed, does not give figures directly applicable in practice, which indeed was not its object. For this purpose new experiments on the large scale are necessary, which shall take into consideration all the working conditions, and, in particular, the absolute dimensions of the heating surfaces. Recently the Verein deutscher Ingenieure has turned its attention to this question. Its competence and ample funds permit us to anticipate the best success.
