It was intended to go through them once more, but very soon after the second cultivation a shower came, accompanied by a severe wind, which spread the tops over the ground so completely that I feared doing more harm than good by any further cultivation, and they received no more. Level Cultivation. The last time they were cultivated the shovel was put on the cultivator, and a very slight furrow, possibly two inches deep, was made between the rows. Except that, there was no hilling done, and in this case no earth was thrown against the plants, and only a very little thrown towards them. June 25 poisoned the Colorado beetles with Paris green and water, using but a teaspoonful of the poison to one ten-quart pail full of water. July 5 to 12 poisoned them again. July 25 found a few more...
