Not illustrated. 1877 Excerpt: .not quite five artillermen to each G-pounder gun, instead of nine, the four others being taken from the lascars. But the proper complement of lascars to drag the gun was one tindal and fourteen; there were actually present only one tindal and ten to each piece, five of whom had to act in a double character. The committee also brought to the notice of Government the deficiency of officers. On this campaign five subalterns were absent: two by sickness, two by promotion, and one on command. Casualties in the action reduced the complement of officers to nearly one-half of the regular number, and at the beginning of it some brigades had none at all. Note C.
