It should also be under stood that no claim is herein made that the procedure created in New Orleans for co-ordinating practically the efforts of many kinds of workers in behalf of the individual study of exceptional children is more than a successful, experimental demonstration of a sound principle, in application capable of improvements and wider use. In these notes summarizing the work of a year no excessive emphasis is intended upon the scientific value of the concrete individual studies presented. It is believed, aside from considerable benefits which have accrued indirectly to many unfortunate children, and aside from the intelligent public interest aroused in the educational problems which are centered about the extremely exceptional child, that it is worth while to make this permanent record of what is becoming known as the New Orleans procedure for studying exceptional children. The number of individual cases studied during the year is too small to warrant elaborate subdivisions and analysis of these concrete cases into types. In each case thoroughly studied, however, where all the desired data as planned have been collected systematically from parent, teacher, physician, psychologist and sociologist,...
