Although there has been extensive research on their sensitivity to air pollutants, much of the work has focused on identifying extreme air pollution symptoms found in plants and trees in the eastern U.S. and California. Not much information is available on pollutant effects on the types of ecosystems found in Region 2 s high-elevation Wilderness areas, and no complete lists of vascular plants have been compiled for the Region. (Currently, the Rocky Mountain Herbarium at the University of Wyoming is conducting a floristic study in the Flat Tops Wilderness, which will include herbaceous plants, shrubs, and trees, with an emphasis on rare and endangered species. The study is expected to be completed this year. Also, the University of Colorado, Boulder herbarium is conducting a floristic study in the Eagles Nest Wilderness. Its emphasis is also on rare and endangered species; the expected completion date is 1992.) Information about lichens and vascular plants can be used to address the following questions which are important in the PSD permit process: 1. Is there a trend in the accumulation of trace metals in lichens? 2. What is the natural variation and current condition of sensitive flora in Region 2? 3. Will increases in deposition affect the condition of any of these flora? Terrestrial ecosystems can be impacted by changes in acidic deposition and air chemistry, but the effects are difficult to measure and in some cases unknown. Baseline monitoring must be conducted for several years to determine the...
